Slavery as a positive good in the United States - Wikipedia
Slavery as a positive good was the prevailing view of white Southern U.S. politicians and intellectuals just before the American Civil War, as opposed to seeing it as a crime against humanity or even a necessary evil. They defended the legal enslavement of people for their labor as a benevolent, paternalistic institution with social and economic benefits, an important bulwark of civilization.

The Antebellum South | Boundless US History
By the 1850s, the South was vigorously defending slavery and its continued expansion into new U.S. territories. Compromises were attempted and failed, and in 1861, 11 slave states broke away to form the Confederate States of America, leading to the American Civil War. In 1862, the federal government made abolition of slavery a war goal. In 1863, President Abraham Lincoln freed slaves in the

The Abolitionist's John Brown | American Battlefield Trust
The legitimation of slavery by the state and societal violence, such as the "Bleeding Kansas" conflict, plagued a nation rapidly approaching civil war, and during the 1850s, the U.S. faced extreme sectional tension as slave-holding and free states struggled to maintain a balance of power in a divided government. Brown's actions were a reflection of the violence of his time and a

Wealth and Culture in the South | US History I (OS Collection)
Calhoun became a leading political theorist defending slavery and the rights of the South, which he saw as containing an increasingly embattled minority. He advanced the idea of a concurrent majority, a majority of a separate region (that would otherwise be in the minority of the nation) with the power to veto or disallow legislation put forward by a hostile majority.
